

You refused to protect one of your own.
You refused to uphold the principles you preach.
You refused to be just — where it mattered the most.

And if this does not shake your conscience, then perhaps the rot runs deeper than we dare admit.

I leave this institution with no medals, no celebration, and no bitterness — only the bitter truth that the judiciary failed me. But worse — it failed itself.

This letter of resignation is not closure. It is a statement of protest. Let it remain in your archives as a reminder that there once was a woman judge in Madhya Pradesh — who gave her all to justice, and was broken by the system that preached it the loudest.

And if even one judge, one registrar, one member of the Collegium reads this and feels unease — then perhaps, my voice has done more justice than my robe ever could.

Yours faithfully
